

Please do not change the rules on broadcast ownership. Look at the situation with clear channel communications, they now control a considerable amount of radio stations and they form a monopoly. The airwaves are public property, and no one company has a right to dominate the majority of them in the name of fair competition. Allowing companies to own so many media outlets in no way can serve the public interest, it only means that the diversity of debate will be stifled. I think the best argument for not approving these changes are the amount of media coverage this decision has recieved in the TV and radio coverage: None. These companies seem to be remaining silent on the issue precisely because they want a chance to have a information monopoly. They don't serve the public interest very well now, how will these rules make them serve it any better.
